Note When you're finished, a sidecar file named _Your Name - Undo History_ is left with the original image and the history of your actions. 2. In the Photoshop window, create and name a layer called Grayscale. The process of creating a new layer is called Layer Mapping. You can perform this step in any editing program. Photoshop enables you to do the steps in just one step, but if you use more than one program to edit, you can repeat this step later. 3. In the top pane, select the Lightness/Lightness Channel and press Enter (Return on a Mac). Selecting the channel opens the Channel Mixer, as shown in Figure 8-1, which is where you'll do your color correction. In Figure 8-1, the Hue Saturation Value (HSV) Color Picker is open (see Matching

Q: Ajax polling 'batching'? I have an ajax request, like so: `$.ajax({ url: "../..../ajax/find_email_bookmark.php", type: "POST", dataType: "json", success: function(data) { $.each(data, function(index, item) { $("ul").append("" + item.title + ""); }); }, complete: function() { $("li").mouseleave(function() { $("ul").find("li").remove(); }); } });` Obviously, it gets repeated until it runs out of data. I would just like to run it once every N seconds, say, then delete it from the cache and start over. Ideally there'd be some simple way to do this. I'm obviously fine with running it once every N seconds as a regular request, it's just that I really really hate performing page refreshes in my app, if at all possible. I've poked around in the `setInterval` function, but I'm not really sure how to use it, nor do I know how to tie it to ajax so as not to mess up the request somehow. Help?

A: As it seems, this was a timeout issue, not an issue with AJAX. So I just changed it to a straight-up javascript request loop.
